The sanitary measures are nearly identical in all. Those relating to the person are avoidance, as far as ossible, of extreme and transitions of temperature, and of irregularities in diet, hours of sleep and clothing. They who are much exposed to the sun's rays in labor or travel, are doubly liable to an attack of cholers, whether it be Asiatic or cholera morbus, if on reaching home they keep on their clothes, wet with prespiration, and go to sleep in the night air of a temper-ature much lower than that of the day. The probability of an attack is greatly increased by eating a hearty supper, or one in which indigestible substances, such as lobsters, unripe fruit and cucumbers enter. Often the same articles which might be eat in the morning without detriment, if not actual benefit, are positively deleterious and bring on serious disease. It ought to be a rule with all persons at this season to take nothing in the evening of a doubtful character, or such as what the individual has found to disagree occasionally with him, or with others of his ac the former, all dram drinking, however disguised and by whatever name called, and guzzling of beer or the like, must be avoided at this season, if not at all other seasons. As a tax payer, through your widely circulated paper I desire to express my utter astonishment at what I believe to be the very unjust and improper report of the Commissioners appoint by the Board of Public Works to assess the property of the B. & O. Under the provisions of section 67, chapter 29, it is made their duty to axamina. their duty to examine as far as practicable all the taxable property practicable all the taxable property of such railroad company within each of the counties of this State and to assess the fair value thereof in money for the purpose of taxation upon the principles hereinbefore stated. quaintance. This rule applies to drinks Mary Clummer Ames in the New York Inde-You are beautiful to-day: many worship you. You will wake up some morning and find your beauty gone, your worshippers kneeling at other shrines. You have power to-day—so much it seems to you that the world your world at least, could not get on without you. Some day you will come suddenly to the knowledge that your power has gone, your burdens have dropped upon other shoulders, your honors are worn by other men; and the world, even your world, gets on with-out you. Life offers no lesson to mor-tals as hard to learn, no lesson hiding in its truth so keen a sting to self love as this, that your prime has passed and that you must make room for others, that the flower of your beauty, the flower of your genius are in their decline; that you must wait in the shadcline; that you must wait in the shadow, while the younger bask in the splendor that you have left behind. How few are ever willing to admit that their time has come to learn it. Thus it is that we see so many women refusing to grow old gracetully. Instead of wearing their years as a crown, mellow and beautiful in the light of their declining sun, they deck grey hairs and wrinkles with a hideous counterfelt of youth. This is why we see writers wilyouth. This is why we see writers writing on reputations which they have long outlived; writing after they have ceased to have anything to say, except to repeat what they said better years and years ago. This is why we see men, once in power, still imagining themselves important, and in garralous and important speech evoking the ghosts of a dead reputation in the councils of younger men.

proceeded in wagons to the scene, halt-ing a short distance from the village and forming in platoons for work. While this was going on affairs in the While this was going on affairs in the village were assuming a serious aspect. Scattered about the streets were groups of Irishmen, many carrying clubs, while twenty-three laborers were coming in from the upper division of the railroad, marching two by two, and led by a stalwart fellow. Each one of the twenty-three carried a lath. Their marching was so recular. Their marching was so regular that it certainly seemed as if they had been drilled. As they passed Armstrong's Hotel they were received with shouts by a crowd gathered there. They passed on to the barn where Welch's horse and wagon were lected, and over which the now were located, and over which the now notorious Jack McDonald and another notorious Jack McDonald and another ugly-looking customer, named John Short, were keeping guard. After halting in front of the barn, they broke ranks, and in squads visited other men in the neighborhood, some partaking freely of liquor, and all pledging mutual support to the last. They openly talked of resisting the military, saying that they might as well be killed as started to death, for they had no monthat they might as well be killed as starved to death, for they had no money. In a few moments the Poughkeepsle company came in sight, and marched to within two hundred feet of the barn, halting in the middle of the road, when Sheriff Kenworthy, Deputy Sheriff Halsted, and four night policemen advance sted, and four night policemen advanced to the stable yard adjoining it. At this particular moment there was a crowd of forty or fifty assembled near the building. COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL.

United States bonds have been and

United States bonds have been and are now regulated almost entirely by the operations of the Government. For some time past, the foreign markets, especially the German, have been heavy, and there can be little doubt, from the general tenor of advices, that a large amount of bonds are being carried there by dealers—a condition of ried there by dealers—a condition of things the more unfavorable from the fact that there is at present a somewhat stubborn reaction from the late speculative excitement on the Frankfort bourse. We are thus temporarily deprived of the usual foreign demand for bonds; we say temporarily, for it appears likely that the usual purchases of foreign bondholders, for the reinvestment of the July interest, will relieve the European markets of the present over supply and prepare the way for a renewal of orders to buy on this market. The absence of the European demand, however, is more than compensated by the heavy purchases of the Government. The transactions not only produce a comparative scarcity of bonds, but, by appreciating the public credit and preparing the way to the ultimate funding lative excitement on the Frankfor paring the way to the ultimate funding of the Six Per Cent Debt at a lower rate of interest, naturally tend to produce an approximation between the value of gold and the value of bonds. It is this process which is now forcing up the prices of Governments to such extraordinary figures. The extent to which this appreciation may be carried must depend upon the amount of surmust depend upon the amount of surplus revenue, the extent to which the Secretary of the Treasury may feel at liberty to employ his surplus in this way, and the ultimate endorsement of his policy by Congress. For the immediate future, however, the purchase of $10,000,000 during the latter half of July, concurrently with an easy money market can scarcely fail to produce an advance upon current prices. To-day, the Bank of England further reduced its rate of discount to 3 per cent., which is an element favorable to the early re covery of the tone of the foreign mar-kets for our securities.
